

Ad-Hoc Query on research conducted on migrant population's perception of safety and trust in authorities

Requested by FI EMN NCP on 12th November 2014

Compilation produced on 21st January 2015

Responses from Austria, Belgium, Czech Republic, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden plus Norway (18 in Total)

Disclaimer: The following responses have been provided primarily for the purpose of information exchange among EMN NCPs in the framework of the EMN. The contributing EMN NCPs have provided, to the best of their knowledge, information that is up-to-date, objective and reliable. Note, however, that the information provided does not necessarily represent the official policy of an EMN NCPs' Member State.

1. Background Information

The authorities dealing with emergency services and public safety in Finland consider the following two research questions to be of central importance in the context of migrant population's safety:

EMN Ad-Hoc Query: Research on migrants' perception of safety and trust in authorities

Migrant population's perception of safety - Persons coming from societies and cultural backgrounds that differ from those of the host culture's welfare society may also have differing concepts of safety: The national authorities responsible for emergency rescue services in Finland need to be aware of these in order to plan and implement successful public safety communication measures.

Trust in authorities - The status and relationship of the authorities vis-à-vis ordinary citizens in the migrants' countries of origin may differ from the situation in Finland. There is some evidence of cases for example from the U.K. and Sweden, where distrust towards authorities has expressed itself in aggressive behaviour towards the personnel of ambulance services and rescue units. The Finnish authorities are interested in learning from other Member States' experiences; for example, by what means has the building of trust between immigrant population and authorities been achieved?

1. Do you have any information regarding either ongoing or planned research on the above mentioned two topics in your Member State?
2. Do you know of any instances in your Member State who would be interested in planning and implementing a joint research project together with the Emergency Services College of Finland that would deal with either one of the above mentioned topics?

We would appreciate your responses by Wednesday December 10th.

	Austria	Yes	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. In 2009, the Research Institute of the Red Cross published a study on the threat perception of migrants. The study can be accessed here (in German language): http://www.roteskreuz.at/fileadmin/user_upload/LV/Wien/Metanavigation/Forschungsinstitut/MitarbeiterInnen%20+%20Projektberichte/SALOMON%20Next%20Step%20Projektendbericht.pdf In the framework of the association "Fair and Sensitive", police officers and migrants work together to build fair and sensitive relationships among individuals and groups of different background in order to contribute to security in Austria. For more information, see http://www.fairundsensibel.at/ In 2007, the police of Vienna started an initiative to recruit more police officers with migration background. For more information, see http://www.bmi.gv.at/cms/BMI_OeffentlicheSicherheit/2012/03_04/files/Bundespolizei.pdf 2. We are not aware of institutions that would be interested in such a project. However, the initiatives mentioned above may be contacted for this purpose.
	Belgium	Yes	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Apart from a scientific research project from 10 years ago (about perception of migrants in law and justice in Belgium – research results only available in Dutch and French), we do not have any knowledge of other research projects about these issues.

Two questions in a survey named ELIPA (Enquête Longitudinale sur l'Intégration des Primo-Arrivants – Longitudinal Survey of the Integration on First-time Arrivals), led by the statistical services of the Ministry of Interior, deal with trust in authorities (both justice and police authorities). The main results of this survey on this topic is that newly arrived migrants have more trust in justice and police authorities than immigrants who have been settled in France for a long time or descendants of immigrants. The other topic, migrant population's perception of safety, has not been tackled. 2. Yes, the department of statistics, studies and documentation of the Ministry of Interior is in principle interested in a joint research project on these topics, subject to receiving more information on this joint research project.
	Germany	Yes	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. No. The evaluation of possible scientific research on these topics can not be carried out within the frame of an ad-hoc query. 2. The training of emergency services takes place decentralized in several institutions (Red Cross, Johanniter Unfallhilfe, Malteser Hilfsdienst etc.), we have nothing like the Emergency Services College of Finland. So we have no instance for such a joint research project.
	Greece	Yes	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. No 2. No, but the Hellenic National Centre of Emergency Care expresses its interest in the results of such a joint research project that would take place.

A study was published by ISTAT (Italian National Statistical Institute) on October 2014, surveying the perception of foreigners living in Italy with regard to a number of topics (safety and trust in Italian authorities were not explicitly covered though). Here below some of the findings: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Most foreign nationals are much more satisfied with their lives overall compared to Italians. 60.8% of them gave scores indicating high satisfaction (from 8 to 10) as against just 37.2% of Italians. Women and young foreigners were more satisfied; - Most foreigners (58.6%) are satisfied with their work (28.7% give a score of 8; 9.8% of 9 and 20.1% of 10). The nationals who were satisfied the most with their work are Philipinos and Moldavians, the least satisfied Chinese and Ukrainians; - Concerning everyday life, 10,9% of foreigner nationals aged 15 or older responded that they were verbally abused or had their feelings hurt or were humiliated at least once during their stay in Italy; 4,3% responded that they were threaten or attacked by someone;

			<ul style="list-style-type: none"> - However, only a very small share of foreigners perceived general hostility toward them in Italy to the extent that they have to move elsewhere. Almost all foreigners aged 15 or older (95.6%) responded that they never felt the need to move to another area of the town or another town (in Italy or abroad) to live peacefully; 2.5% said that they felt this need and only 1.2% stated they were considering it. 2. 	Luxembourg	Yes	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. There is no planned research which specifically targets migrant population's perception of safety or migrant population's trust in authorities. However different surveys based on representative samples of the resident population have been conducted in an ad hoc manner on these issues (see for example Statec, Regards n° 24 on the sense of safety of the residents in Luxembourg, based on the victimisation survey 2013) Furthermore, the sense of safety is a question foreseen in the PSELL 2013 (Socio- economic panel Life in Luxembourg). The trust in authorities or institutions is an aspect foreseen in different international surveys that took place in the past in Luxembourg, for example the European Values Studies, the European Quality Life Survey. For Luxembourg, the European Values Studies permits identifying and comparing perceptions of nationals and foreigners, or of people with migration background and natives. Under the lead of the Ministry of Interior a recent study "Committed to diversity" has been conducted on the volunteers in the rescue services (ambulance services and firemen) and on the satisfaction and perception of these services among the resident population. The study has not yet been published. 2. 	Netherlands	Yes	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Trust in the authorities is one of the questions that is frequently touched upon in researches of Statistics Netherlands (Centraal Bureau voor de Statistiek) and the Netherlands Institute for Social Research (Sociaal and Cultureel Planbureau). Statistics Netherlands periodically update the Survey Integration Migrants/New Groups. This survey specifically pays attention to this topic. Click here for the report of 2012. In 2012, a study of the Netherlands Institute for Social Research called "Dichter bij elkaar?" (literally: "Closer to each other?") the apprehension of migrants of the Dutch authorities was discussed (page 100). Click here for the report. In several studies of Statistics Netherlands the way Dutch and migrants judged the security situation in their neighbourhood and their city was analysed. Those studies were called: "de Veiligheidsmonitor ("The Safety Monitor"). This is a reference for the report of 2013. The above-mentioned Netherlands Institute for Social Research also looks after this question of feeling of security of migrants in the Netherlands. This subject was touched upon in studies on integration, hereby you can find one example (see page 220): 2. None of the agencies whom we have contacted, showed interest in participating in this research.
	Slovenia	Yes	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Not to be aware of any such research has been done, is ongoing or planning on the above mentioned two topics.

The Norwegian Directorate of Integration and Diversity (IMDi) has an ongoing project, a barometer of integration, based on interviews with several thousand immigrants. The interviewees have, among other things, been asked about their trust in a range of public institutions, like the police, the judiciary, the child protection services and so on. The results from this project will be published in March 2015. 2. The National Emergency Planning College (NUSB) is organized under The Norwegian Directorate for Civil Protection (DSB). We would advise you to contact them about any possible cooperation or contact with research institutions.
